

Feedback for RRMP Literature Review [Formative]

The cover page for your formative is laid out to an excellent professional standard, and so do feed this forward to your actual summative Literature Review.

Just watch the consistency in your paragraphs and so aim for all to be more or less the same size, and so for example don't make any one paragraph much longer than another.

There is some citation in your content, which is good, and also what I would call some citation 'notes' and so general references from where information is coming from. I appreciate you already understand this as we have spoken about this in online seminars, but make sure your citation is conventionally academically correct in the final summative, and so (author, date); example, (Smith, 2020).

Good to see you have started a reference list and so do now just make sure that for your summative all references in your final list are reflected in in text citation as well.

Ensure there is a clear title at the top of the actual summative that states the topic you have chosen, otherwise the content won't make sense and the reader has to 'guess' at the topic.

The topic you have chosen is current and your dissection of how you intend to tackle the topic does promise an interesting read in the final summative.

Your writing style is concise, and your syntax is well structured. It is easy for the reader to understand what you intend to do in the final summative which is positive.

Ensure that in the final summative, there is discussion and debate occurring around your chosen subject, and please also ensure that academic conventions are followed, [again reflect on what we have already discussed in seminars].

I look forward to your final summative.

With best wishes

Karen Outram
